CASPER & WENDY in

What a 25th Anniversary!

Casper and Wendy turned in their trick-or-treat UNICEF boxes and headed for home. "Sit on my broom if you're tired, Casper," said Wendy. "It's been a really busy Halloween!"

"No, thanks," said Casper as he zipped along beside the flying broom, "I'm too excited to be tired. I wonder how much money everyone collected for UNICEF today!"

"I know MY UNICEF box was pretty heavy," Wendy said, smiling. "Wouldn't it be something if we helped collect more for UNICEF this year than ever before? It would be nice to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of Trick or Treat for UNICEF by breaking a record!"

Suddenly Casper swooped toward the ground. "I see something orange down among those mushrooms!" he called. "Look, Wendy, somebody must have dropped a UNICEF box!"

"Well, for goodness sake, pick it up, Casper!" Wendy urged as she landed her broom. "Maybe there's money in it! We need every cent if we're going to break a record!"

Casper picked up the little orange box from amid the mushrooms and shook it. It rattled! And then it spoke!

"Who's shaking my house?" said an angry little voice.

Casper laughed. "Are you throwing your voice, Wendy?" he asked. "No!" Wendy answered, "Are YOU?"

"Will you kindly stop arguing right outside my window?" said the little voice in the box.

"We're not arguing!" Casper replied without thinking. "We were just joking." Then he DID think. "WAIT A MINUTE!" he shouted. "Wendy, am I having a conversation with a UNICEF box?"

"Silly!" Wendy said with a giggle, "Somebody is in the box!"

"Somebody certainly is!" said the little voice, "And it isn't a box, it's a house! And I'm not having a conversation with you, whoever you are, I'M COMPLAINING! STOP SHAKING MY HOUSE!" The little orange box trembled in Casper's hands. Casper tried to look inside through the coin slot, but it was too dark to see anyone. "I'm sorry," Casper said, "We don't want to upset you, but your .ah. house is really a UNICEF collection box, and if there's any money in it, it's supposed to go to poor children all over the world."

There was a long silent pause. Then the little voice spoke again: "You're making that up!"

"Why would he do that?" Wendy asked.

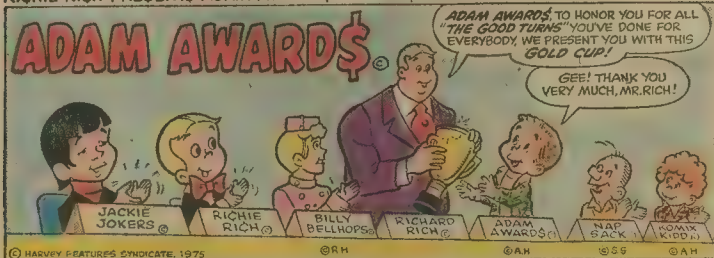

"Because you want my furniture!" the little voice exclaimed.

"We don't want your furniture," Casper said patiently. "But if there's any money. . ."

"My furniture IS money!" snapped the little voice. "A stack of quarters makes a nice bed, a stack of dimes is my stool and a stack of nickels is my table. Or it was, till you shook my house and broke my furniture!"

Casper spoke softly and carefully. "I'm going to try to explain this as clearly as I can. I see now that you found this box of money and moved into it to use it as a house. But it belongs to UNICEF, and some little boy or girl must have dropped it after trick-or-treating for UNICEF. And it's a special Halloween this year. Kids have been trick-or-treating for UNICEF for twenty-five years now, and on this special anniversary we all want to collect as much as we can, to help as many kids as we can all over the world. Do you understand?"

"I understand!" said the little voice, "And that's not even a GOOD fairy tale! What's a Unicorn? Some kind of fancy unicorn? Why should I believe what a GHOST and a WITCH tell me? I'm not one of your goody-good elves, you know!"

Now Wendy began to get angry. "Whatever you are, you're not very polite! You can see who we are, looking through that little coin slot, but we have to talk to a mean little voice! Wait a minute. That mean little voice... you're an IMP!"

"Okay, you guessed it," said the imp. "Now you know that no ghost or witch can scare me or make me believe your fancy story! Leave!"

"I know somebody he'd believe," said Casper. "How would you like to fly to New York City, Wendy?"

"To the United Nations, Casper? What a terrific idea!" Wendy exclaimed.

It was a long trip, so Casper was willing to ride on Wendy's broom this time, as he held the UNICEF box cupped carefully in his hands.

"What's a New York City? What's a United Nations? You're making up words to frighten me!" the imp complained as they flew along.

"Look out your 'window'," Casper said. "See the big buildings? We're over New York City, and soon we'll be at the United Nations, the home of UNICEF."

"I like my little orange house better," the imp mumbled, not very bravely.

Wendy landed her broom in front of the world-famous glass-covered U.N. building and the little ghost and the little witch carried the orange box right to UNICEF headquarters.

"Nobody's afraid of us," Wendy whispered, "So I guess they've gotten used to seeing kids in Halloween costumes around here."

Before the imp had time to complain again his orange "house" was sitting on the desk of the president of The U.S. Committee for UNICEF and Casper and Wendy were explaining the whole situation. "But the little imp won't believe anything we tell him, Mrs. Pantaleoni!" Wendy said.

Mrs. Pantaleoni picked up the box and smiled. "Why don't you come out, Impy?" she said. "I loveimps. The United Nations Children's Fund has helpedimps of all sizes all over the world!"

"A lady president?" said Impy, "If I believed that I'd believe anything!"

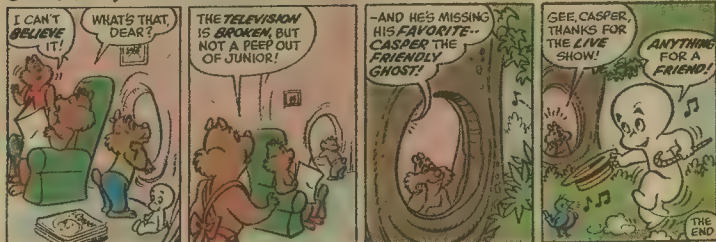

Mrs. Pantaleoni smiled.

The imp jumped out of the box. "Somehow," he said, "I believe it!" He held out his tiny hand to the lady president. "I'd believe ANYTHING YOU told me!"

"You little imp!" said Mrs. Pantaleoni, "I'm not sure I believe YOU!"

So everything ended happily. Impy handed in his "furniture" and received a brand-new UNICEF box to live in as long as he liked, and Casper and Wendy shook hands with Mrs. Pantaleoni, and she promised to let them know, as soon as all the Halloween money was counted, if it was a record!
